Program: Eriech Horvath introduced Jeff Hussey, Granville Fire Chief and President of the Licking County Fire Chiefs Association.

Jeff travelled out west to fight the 2015 Oregon wild fires and said about 9.8 million acres have burned in 2015 so far. They have had extreme drought conditions in the west for the past 10 years.

The biggest challenge is working with the urban interface requiring aggressive firefighting and a major impact on the cost.

Jeff was part of an Ohio Interagency Fire Crew. A 20 person line crew is on call for months. Firefighters have 4-8 hours of notice for a 3-week deployment. A 40-hour special training is required to be certified.

Crew makeup ages were between 20 and 67, with a wide range of backgrounds. Individual gear weight is 60 pounds. Firefighters worked 16 hour days for three weeks.

Jeff began in Tiller, Oregon, with the Stouts Creek Fire which covered 23,000 acres. The second area was in John Day, Oregon, for the Canyon Creek Fire that began as a lightning strike and was the 10th largest fire in the nation. The firefighters worked through the 14th day at which point the team needed to be finished with their duty.

Jeff shared his personal photos as he prepared for leaving Ohio. He met 19 other guys, not knowing who they were on their way to Harrisburg, Pa. They hooked up at a fire station at which point the team slept outside on cots.

Jeff's photos were amazing and gave a better sense of the seriousness of wild fires. Jeff shared stories of the 150 foot ponderosa pines being so incredibly dry that fires start underground and in the root systems as the trees burn up inside. The bark is so dry that the fire tries to climb them. 1,000 gallon water drops made the difference.

The fires make their own weather. You can see the entire hill across town burn through the night. Local farm buildings were used for briefings and camp set up. It was a very smoky atmosphere for the communities.

Winning ticket: Zane Wachtel
